DISNEY Cruise Line has instituted a new mandate which seems to discourage the hiding of rubber ducks on board its ships.

For the uninitiated, the fad of hiding a rubber duck aboard a ship began on board Carnival Cruise Line in 2018, and has since spread to most brands.

Disney's new mandate however seems to discouraging the practice.

"According to our policy, guests are allowed to bring rubber ducks onboard," a Disney statement has said.

"It's important to note that pool toys, including rubber ducks, are not permitted to be used in the pools."

It continued: "Additionally, we kindly request that guests are not allowed to hide items such as rubber ducks in public areas or staterooms."

Shoot for the stars

THE Seabourn Cruise Line (SCL) fleet is now equipped with SpaceX's Starlink wifi technology, which offers enhanced internet capabilities and elevated connectivity.

SCL received positive feedback from its guests aboard its Starlink-equipped expedition ships, which led to the cruise line rolling the technology out across its entire fleet.

The hottest new duet

ROYAL Caribbean International and the Eurovision Song Contest are set to take the stage together in a new partnership, which will debut in time for the 68th hosting of the competition.

This year's Eurovision in Malmo in May will coincide with the start of Royal Caribbean's European season, which will feature six ships sailing from eight cities across the continent, visiting a landmark line-up of destinations.

"As two world-renowned brands that are known for delivering memorable moments to millions across the globe, the combination of Royal Caribbean International and Eurovision Song Contest makes the ultimate partnership that will bring to life the very best of world-class live entertainment and a fusion of cultures from all over," the cruise line's Vice President Europe, Middle East &

Africa Ben Bouldin said.

"With more than 60 historic years of the Eurovision Song Contest, we're proud to partner with an iconic brand that has a global audience, which only continues to grow with the popularity of an event that has become a cultural moment for so many around the world."

Eurovision Executive Supervisor Marin Osterdahl said the Contest is thrilled to announce its new partnership with the cruise line.

"The Eurovision Song Contest and Royal Caribbean share a passion for creating unforgettable experiences that unite people from all around the world," Osterdahl added.

"We look forward to making new memories for our fans and guests alike and can't wait to set sail together on this new adventure." MS

Cruise rape claim

TWO passengers on board a Margaritaville at Sea cruise have claimed they were raped by an onboard bartender, according to reports.

One of the women, known in a lawsuit from last month as 'Jane Doe', alleges she became pregnant as a result of the assault, and "was forced to terminate the pregnancy, from which she then suffered serious complications."

Doe and her cabinmate. identified in a separate lawsuit as HB, allege the bartender pocketed one of their room keys while serving them drinks, and used it to enter their stateroom after both women fell asleep.

The bartender has pleaded guilty to one count of abusive sexual contact.
